Course Description

This course makes students familiar with diverse aspects of human behavior in organizations. The course considers the following: how organizations select good employees, how organizations maintain a healthy and motivated workforce, effective leadership styles, and the characteristics of high-performing teams. An array of different topics from work and organizational psychology are studied such as work stress, occupational health, emotions in organizations, leadership, personnel selection, work motivation, and teamwork. The course consists of lectures, assignments, and a group project in which students focus on one of the topics mentioned above. At the end, there is a 'mini conference' in which groups present the results of their group work.
