Course Description
This course provides a historical base for further sociological and anthropological study, and philosophical reflection on religion. Students consider the religious history of Islam from about 1800 to the present and survey the rise of Islamic reformism, modernism, revivalism, and activism. Students also examine other topics including: religious leaders in Iran, Egypt, and India, relations between Islam and nationalism and socialism, the organization and activity of the Sufi brotherhoods, Islamic political activism from Algeria to Indonesia, and the works of leading Muslim writers as available in English. Students examine these topics in a range of countries from those in North Africa to the Soviet Union.
