Course Description

This course explores Shanghai and facilitates students' personal experience in the city as well as China. Students use their own first-hand observations, coupled with broad-based readings in a range of social science areas, to reach an understanding about Shanghai and the rapid pace of China’s modernization. The course values empirical experiences. By fieldwork as well as observation, students see the city through their own eyes. The reflection over first hand empirical experiences are included in the assignments, presentations and final work. Students critically argue their empirical experiences by making comparison between Shanghai and other cities, by looking into the cultural or institutional background of their observation.
