Course Description
This course introduces students to urban anthropology, and it is geared toward students who go on to do academic research in areas of applied research in urban settings. Since the 1930s, urban anthropology has been a main sub-fields of social anthropology, and with an ever-increasing percentage of the world's population living in urban contexts, the relevance of urban and modern modes of living has become central for anthropological research. In a world where global mobility is intense and consumerism dominates, it can be argued that even rural populations live under periurban conditions. Traditionally, urban anthropology dealt centrally with problems of marginality and deviance, but now increasingly the focus is on the interaction between urban planning and the politics of everyday living.
