Course Description
The cinema of action and adventure encompasses a range of genres and incorporates the output and influences of a number of national traditions and industries. Writings about action and adventure likewise address theoretical frames as varied as gender and power, vengeance and manifest destiny, the philosophies of life and death, psychological trauma, and the socio-political positioning of discourses of cinema itself in both the popular and the scholarly context. This course addresses this range of topics examining films and writings from several analytical perspectives under the general banner of film genre and genre theory.
