Course Description
This course offers an advanced introduction to public law, with a focus on the interaction between law and economics. The course includes a general introduction to sources of law, constitutions, constitutional amendments, constitutional statutes, ordinary statutes, law decrees, legislative decrees and delegated legislation, bylaws, and regulations. Students discuss topics including forms of state and government; transitions to democracy and electoral laws; federalism, regionalism, and devolution; constitutional justice; fundamental aspects of American and European models of constitutional review; classification of court judgments and analysis of decision-making techniques; legal system of the European Union; political, economic, and civil rights and related safeguards; and constitutional law issues relating to the sphere of arts, culture, and communication. Students complete a written final exam. There are two versions of this course, one taught in Italian and one taught in English. This is the English taught course.
