Course Description

The course surveys Japan’s international relations with China, Korea, and Europe between the 15th to 17th century. First, the course looks at the development of diplomacy and trade in East Asia, focusing on the “sea-closing policy” of China during the 14-16th centuries; the activity of Japanese diplomatic and trade missions to China, and the collapse of the tribute system. Then it investigates the relations with Europe during the 16th century, examining the new quality of foreign relations during the Edo Period; the development and role of the port cities Hirado and Nagasaki, and the trade with the Europeans and the Chinese.
