Course Description

The goal of this course is to provide students with the tools to analyze and understand the issues of citizenship, nationality, and stake holding in contemporary European societies, using a theoretical and historical perspective, using notably history and political sociology. Several sessions are devoted to case studies (Hungarian minorities and "ethnic" citizenship, the question of the Roms, regional nationalisms in Great Britain or in Spain, etc.). This specific configurations allow students to approach the themes through diverse lenses: the construction of identity, the mobilization of identity, memory, and citizenship.
