Course Description
In this course, students learn to understand, analyze, and explain British political events and processes. The course introduces students to the key institutions and actors at the heart of British democracy, and how they have shaped and reacted to political events in the post-war era to create the context of modern British politics. It also introduces key theories, concepts, and debates that lie at the heart of the broader study and understanding of politics, such as political ideology and its role in shaping political parties' decisions, the representativeness of Parliament and Members of Parliament, or how voters decide who to vote for.
