Course Description
This course explores the power of storytelling from a cross-cultural perspective. The course examines the power of stories by looking at how they originate in various cultural contexts and analyzing how stories both interpret and transform our world. The course explores how different communities use particular types of stories and media and how stories can give a voice to those who are disempowered. Students learn old and new forms of storytelling from multicultural and cross-cultural perspectives (with case studies from Asia, Latin America, Europe, Africa, Australasia), and craft global stories.
