Course Description

This seminar explores how the problems of biodiversity, and the solutions to these problems, relate to the “New Social Contract”, or the world order that is coming from globalization, deregulation, technological revolutions, and the evolutions of the governing of the past 30-50 years. The course takes a three-fold approach: understand what biodiversity is, as well as the state of the living world today; the broad categories of reasoning and arguments for the protection of biodiversity and the problems posed by the loss of biodiversity; the different policies which pose problems and the political, legal, and economic instruments created for biodiversity, and what we can each do at our level.
