Course Description
The course introduces students to three works of 20th-century literature and culture to be read in Russian, while improving reading and comprehension skills. It includes a combination of canonical and non-canonical texts by men and women, and explores the cultural and institutional contexts in which texts were produced, published, viewed, and read. Students share impressions through class, online discussions, and informal presentations. This course prepares students for Honors content courses where longer and more complex texts are read in Russian. While optional, students intending to pursue single or joint honors including Russian are encouraged to take this course.
