Course Description
This course explores the relationship between globalization, transnational corporations, international law, and nation states. It provides an analysis of businesses and their role in the protection and promotion of labor welfare and labor rights. The course covers international labor organization (ILO), labor rights and welfare of migrant workers, globalization and its effect on labor, international trade and development, international montetary and financial institutions, international regulation, influence and power of transnational corporations, and human rights violations. Other topics include international labor migration and displacement caused by globalization; cross-country labor migration carried out by multinational corporations; impact of transnational corporations on the national social, economic, and political developments of national states; and issues of workers' rights and quality of life of both foreign labor and local workers in multinational enterprises. It also investigates international declarations, conventions, and protocols, as well as national legislation pertinent to welfare rights of transnational labor, displaced persons, and local workers in multinational corporations.
