Course Description
This course introduces the practice of sociological/criminological research using different methods. Students are introduced to debates in the social sciences related to research design, epistemology, and ethical issues, while also getting practical experience in key methods for gathering and analyzing qualitative data including interviewing, participant observation, and textual analysis. The philosophy underpinning the course is that research methods cannot be adequately taught in the abstract, and consequently the course emphasizes the practice of social research and its application to sociological and criminological issues.
