Course Description
This course examines the political, social, economic, intellectual, and diplomatic history of China from the last decade of Manchu rule to the Communist victory in 1949. Attention is drawn to the historical forces of continuity and change and to the themes of nationalism, modernization, militarism, democracy, and revolution. Main sections are political revolution to national disintegration and cultural revolution, nominal reunification, nationalist rule during the Nanjing decade, the China communist movement, and from war with Japan to civil war and communist victory. The lectures are supplemented by documentary films.
