Course Description
This course continues from the foundations laid in the Digital Media & Information Studies (DMIS) level 1 courses, to explore the creation, use, and impact of digital content and information technology in the arts, humanities, and society at large. It brings a human perspective to the issues of the digital age. Students build on the foundations laid in the first year of DMIS and are introduced to new concepts and applications; explore information theory and structures; explore methods and applications of information management within professional criteria; and gain transferable skills in approaches to technology, critical analysis, and problem solving across the arts and cultural heritage sector.
