Course Description

This course endorses an interdisciplinary approach to the various issues that Europe (as European Union and non-European Union) must address, combining traditional and critical security studies, politics, political sociology, media studies, and European studies. It considers whether, through crises, Europe not only builds policies but shapes its collective polity, as well as the risk of European collapse. It looks at key elements related to European unity and disunity to explore various crisis scenarios faced by the continent and create a place for students to exchange ideas about current affairs and the future of Europe.
