Course Description
This course allows students to acquire a critical view of the omnipresent global challenges that are often neglected or simplified in public debate. It draws on a rich range of examples to understand the profound interdependence of international social, environmental, economic, and security subjects. Among the key topics are: conflicts and security, global inequalities, environmental issues, and the “return of the sacred.” This course draws on perspectives from sociology, political theory and economy, human geography, and comparative and world history. This course includes a seminar and a tutorial.
