Course Description
Drawing from a wide range of sources, this course traces the history of Hong Kong from a gender perspective with women as the focus. The course examines narratives recording and reflecting on women's past in upper-class households, textile factories, rural villages, brothels, Mid-levels boarding school and the LegCo chamber. Through lectures, self-study, and group discussions, students relate the personal to social, political and economic changes in historical writing, and explore the use of auto/biographies and oral histories as a methodology investigating marginalized voices of the past.
