Course Description

This course examines the history of England, including the British Isles, from around 400 AD to the year 1000 AD. This was a period of immense change as England transitioned from a Roman Colony, to independent warring states, to a kingdom governed by a single king. In the years following the Roman withdrawal, different groups of Germanic-speaking peoples settled in Britain, ultimately forming independent kingdoms. These settlers were later known by the name Anglo-Saxons. This course follows the development of these independent kingdoms from their origins through to the 10th century. Students learn about the rich cultural heritage of the Anglo-Saxon period, including significant works of art and literature. Through discussion and debate, students assess the reliability of these textual sources in light of new historical and archaeological research. Students study the religious and political structures and engage critically with academic literature in order to discuss primary sources.
