Course Description

This course explores issues related to intercultural communication in the business context. The course provides opportunities to work with and learn from global companies in Japan. The course is held in collaboration with the Marshall School of Business at the University of Southern California (USC). As one of ICU's COIL (Collaborative Online International Learning) courses, students have an opportunity to work virtually with students from USC on issues related to intercultural communications in specific company settings. Various aspects and issues in intercultural business communications, such as cultural values, norms, verbal and nonverbal language, identity, gender issues in the business context, new technology and intercultural business communication, and intercultural negotiation teams and conflict resolution, and intercultural dynamics in the international company are reviewed and discussed.
