Course Description

This course provides a study of what is meant by literature and how it is studied today. It considers definitions of literature developed by academics and creators whose opinions have been decisive in the contemporary intellectual debate. The course also analyzes the concept of literary genres (drama, lyric, narrative), and reviews their historical evolution. Key concepts of the metalanguage of literary studies (speech / text, enunciation / enunciation and fiction / non-fiction, among others) is also examined.
