Course Description
This course examines the history of the Weimar Republic through an exploration of its literature, film, art, performance, and music. Students discuss how Weimar culture is shaped by political and economic influences, as well as examining how it responds to periods of crisis and uncertainty. Students question what sort of space it provides for articulating new, alternative visions of society. They also consider how competing ideas about modern Germany and its place in the world are reflected in and shaped by the culture of the period.
