Course Description

This course introduces how to design research projects on a question having to do with law and/or justice. Students begin by exploring how gaps in the existing knowledge about a topic can be identified and how a research question can be formulated to fill such a gap. Students explore various types of questions as well as the kinds of data, sources, and research methods that develop arguments in response. Students further examine ways in which data can be collected as well as how sources can be usefully drawn upon. Students are expected to participate by raising questions and sharing ideas during class meetings and on a discussion forum, and by writing reflections on designing a research project.
