Course Description
This course explores the and cataclysmic changes of the 17th century through the prism of poetry. The course explores how poets responded to England's fundamental change in the national religion, civil war, a steep rise in women authors, and the emergence of modern science, through voices of both radicalism and conservatism. The course explores a wide range of canonical and less well-known poets, from John Milton and Andrew Marvell to Aemilia Lanyer and Edmund Waller. The course investigates the models and precedents that poets called upon to write about these unprecedented events.
