Course Description
This course provides students with an understanding of core dynamics, conflicts, and consequences of contemporary forms of globalization, especially as these pertain to interactions between the so-called Global North and Global South. The course focuses on how Europe is and has been positioned in these global flows, and how the European Union (EU) and other actors have sought to handle resulting problems or exploit emerging opportunities. Students are introduced to theoretical and conceptual knowledge necessary to understand various forms of globalization and to recognize the historical, discursive, and material foundations of contemporary dynamics. The course also analyzes the consequences for Europe and the political responses of the EU in relation to aspects of globalization such as migration, ecological destruction, transnational crime, or global inequality and development.
