Course Description
This course provides students with an appreciation of the issues, techniques, and concepts involved in the field of quality management. The coverage of quality management requires a multidisciplinary approach, integrating concepts and techniques based on systems, behavioral, and quantitative techniques. To overcome the lack of experience of business practice among students, the teaching, course-work, and supporting computer exercises are strongly case oriented, with a course web site providing supporting material. The teaching sessions address the wide range of topics involved in operations management. These topics are related in groups and individual exercises to particular situations, in order to show how principles apply in practice. Finally, the 2 course-work project provides an opportunity for students to analyze and discuss the issues in a case study of their own choice.
