Course Description

This course begins with 12 fundamental problems in philosophy, and takes the list of these problems as a cue to introduce the main part of this course, i.e., the four main positions of the materialist conception of the nature of mind, which include: behaviorism, identity theory, eliminative materialism, and functionalism. When each position is addressed, the reasons for supporting it and main objections against it are provided to the audience respectively. The whole course is materialism-oriented, but there is still enough space for discussing its competing positions like dualism. This course also focuses on the correlation between philosophy and Artificial Intelligence.
