Course Description

Russia is the European Union's biggest neighbor and, arguably, its most challenging partner. Complex inter-linkages and interdependences – in trade, energy, security, and politics – have developed in the relations between these two international actors over the last quarter of the century. Russia's policies in Ukraine have seriously altered these relations as Europe responded with sanctions against the Russian economy and Russia adopted its counter-sanctions. This course provides students with a detailed and extensive coverage of the major events, economic, and political challenges which define the field of EU-Russia relations, including trade and cooperation, security and governance, defense and foreign policy, and such key issues as the future of Ukraine and the cooperation potential in Syria. The module provides students with an overall sense of the vectors driving Russian foreign policy towards Europe, and the contents and priorities informing the EU's economic and foreign policy outlook towards its most strategically important neighbor to the East.
