Course Description
This course explores western Christendom during the central Middle Ages, and how it was affected by wars (internal and external), economic change (the growth of trade and expansion of cultivation, famine and plague), and religious innovation (church reform, dissenting movements, encounters with non-Christians). The course offers a thematic survey of religious practices and the impact of religion on society more generally in the central and later medieval west. Students examine the practice and impact of religion in medieval society, social structures (such as the significance if marriage and family), and various cultures.
