Course Description
This course examines the Special Administrative Region's unique international status, the political implications of its external socioeconomic ties, and its complex identity as a Chinese global city. It discusses how Hong Kong's interactions with the outside world are critical to its survival as a major international city and how they shape its ability to position itself as the leading gateway to the mainland of China. It also explains how Hong Kong retains considerable autonomy in shaping its international destiny although China manages its foreign affairs. Prominent members of the Hong Kong community are invited to share their perspectives on Hong Kong's track record in facing the challenges and opportunities associated with today's highly interdependent global system. By exploring these themes in light of the changing nature of the global system, students gain an in-depth knowledge of Hong Kong's international links and the complex problems of global governance.
