Course Description
This course examines the social, political, economic, and religious history of the Roman world under the rule of the emperors from the creation of the new régime by Augustus (c. 31 BC) to the establishment of Christianity and the separation of the eastern and western empires at the death of Theodosius (AD 395). Students examine the nature and limitations of the historical tradition and look beyond it to the other sources of information for Roman life in this period.
