Course Description
This course involves five field visits to religious groups followed by discussions at seminars. While the visits are designed to enhance students' knowledge of religion and observational skills, the seminars provide opportunities for discussing and making sense of these observations and connecting them to what students have learned from academic disciplines such as sociology, anthropology, history of religion, and theology. Participation in the course provides unique opportunities for students to directly engage with London's religious communities and to develop skills necessary for researching and understanding issues that arise from the city's unprecedented religious diversity.
