Course Description

The theme of this course is social entrepreneurship. Such enterprises are established with the primary purpose of finding a solution to a social problem or creating social value by reaching out to underserved sections of the society. The course is conducted with a combination of lectures and case discussions. This course aims to introduce the concepts, theories and real cases in social enterprises. An increasing number of talented, ambitious individuals around the world, out of their concern for the varied problems faced by humanity are trying to solve these problems, some at a local level, some at an international level. Through real world examples and case study analysis, students will learn how such enterprises are organized, what their challenges are and how exactly they try to solve social problems. Units: The regular version of this course is worth 3.0 UC quarter units. The Q version of this course is worth 4 or 4.5 UC quarter units. Students must submit a special study project form which outlines the requirements for the additional units. This is typically an additional paper graded by the instructor of the course.
