Course Description

This course covers theories about the production of space, concepts related to agents and urban strategies, and the contradictory strategies that act on the urban space. It examines urban complexity based on interests that are at stake in city space, theories about the urban field, and the correlation of theory with practical reality. Topics include: governance instruments (communication, participation and strategic planning); training of urban agents in contemporary society; collective communication; urban conflict and consensus; management and experiences in urban policies and agents; technology, innovation, city construction, ideology and the future.
