Course Description
This course highlights the basic knowledge and skills required to work with children. The course addresses issues of human rights relating to children. It discusses the developmental milestones of children, focusing on a number of theoretical perspectives on child development. It also looks at disorders associated with the developmental stages and how these affect the child's functioning. Also to be examined are familial determinants of children's behaviors and extra-familial stressors, social problems usually associated with children due to their vulnerability, techniques of communicating with and assessing children, and most importantly intervention with children facing various kinds of problems or difficulties.
