Course Description
This course explores the relation between psyche and society through an analysis of crucial contemporary and historical issues in Central and Eastern Europe, with a focus on the Czech Republic. Topics such as racism, sexuality, ecology, history, and politics are studied from the perspective of socially informed, in-depth psychology. The course examines these topics from a multiplicity of psychodynamic perspectives, juxtaposing the stark reality of the region's history and culture with various psychoanalytic tools for understanding. Competing intellectual traditions are not decided for and against but are seen as mutually enriching. Each individual is encouraged to take a stand on the issues involved and develop their own unique perspective.
