Course Description
This course provides an overview of the history of charity and the roles it has played in shaping conceptions of social order at the local and global levels. It provides a chronological overview of shifts in the language, conceptualizations, and practices of charity from late antiquity to the present day. Students explore the charity in relation to the history of religion, ideas, institutions, law, and cultural practices. The course explores charity from the perspective of global history by exploring some transcultural comparatives of charity and by exploring the roles that charity has played in global projects from empire formation to international development.
