Course Description

This course provides an account of the main features, performance, and associated policy issues of the Irish Economy. The course begins with an overview of the evolution of the Irish economy from the 20th century through to the present day. The objectives of Irish economic policy are then defined. The role of the government in achieving these objectives and the various policy issues which arise in their attainment is then considered as students examine some of these areas: regulation and competition policy, labor market and migration, distribution and poverty, manufacturing and internationally-traded services, and education.
