Course Description

This course suggests three objectives for understanding pandemics from a sociological standpoint. First, it explains the pandemic's history as well as the sociological theory surrounding it. Second, it looks at health disparities, class inequality, platform labor, information-seeking behavior, fake news, education, caring, gender, hate, stigma, and social capital in relation to the pandemic. Third, it investigates the policy implications of these fields as well as the meaning of sociology in the post-pandemic era.
