Course Description

This course offers an overview of emerging social issues in contemporary China, focusing on changes after 1949 and how China's transition from a command economy to a market economy has brought fundamental and rapid changes in its social structure and social relationships among members of different subgroups in society. Topics include sociological perspectives such as changes and new challenges in Chinese families, gender roles, demographic structure and distribution, social safety net, and environment. The course combines lectures, academic readings, films, sources from the mass media, and discussions.
