Course Description

The course explores strategic management and business analysis. Strategic planning can be affected by various changes in the external environment in which a business operates for example with the invention of the Internet and introduction of E-Commerce. Constant changes in the environment means continually evolving strategies, new products, and new processes to adopt. The movement from the traditional bricks-and-mortar towards an online presence is an important evolutionary process for companies today. The internet presents new sources of innovative opportunities and demands management to rethink traditional strategy formulation with new approaches.
