Course Description

The course explores development gaps, the relationships between per capita income and other measures of development, theories of economic growth, and the development process. It focuses on the role of physical, human, and social capital, as well as economic growth in regards to technology and population. The course reviews problems of externalities, coordination failure, and path dependence. Specific attention is paid to the relationships between inequality, poverty, and economic growth. Development strategies and policies related to agriculture, industry, trade and services, and infrastructure are discussed together with the role of the state, market, and other institutions. A specific gender perspective is taken up in the discussion on population issues, human capital, and poverty.
