Course Description

Students basically learn by doing, trying out different techniques and approaches for teaching children English, devising their own lesson plans, and presenting these in class. Topics include total physical response, songs, stories, cross-curricular activities, classroom language and textbooks. Theoretical issues are arrived at via the consideration of practical considerations. Activity-based rather than language-based teaching is encouraged. This course aims to explore the characteristics of children, and their needs in the classroom. Students develop basic techniques for teaching children, and practice these techniques in class. Students also develop ideas and materials for teaching children and examine the differences between language-based and activity-based courses.
