Course Description
This course introduces the main themes, concepts and debates in human geography and development studies. Case studies to illustrate these topics are drawn from across the world, with particular emphasis on patterns and processes in developing countries in the regions that surround Oceania, Latin America and the Asia-Pacific region. The course introduces core, cross-cutting concepts in geography and development studies and how these seek to understand global problems. The course then explores development geographies; political geographies, migration geographies, social and cultural geographies and how these are manifested in urban and rural settings.
