Course Description
This course examines developments across Christendom between the First Crusaders' seizure of Jerusalem in 1099 and the demographic shocks of the earlier 14th century. Students think about the nature of Christendom; however, not only on “European” terms, but also through the many cultures which interacted and sometimes conflicted with it: Byzantine, Mongol, Mamluk, and Kurdish. They look at and use a wide range of political, religious, visual, and literary sources to rethink the period. It is oddly in need of reinterpretation given the number of “emblematic” medieval institutions, which developed during it (crusades, inquisitions, gothic art, the rise of universities, and the coming of the friars).
