Course Description
This course is an introduction to the field of medical sociology, also known as sociology of health, and considers the relationship between society and health-related issues. It explores the differing notions of illness and wellness; how societies influence the type, definition, and distribution of disease and illness; the social organization of medicine; and the social functions of health-care institutions in society. Special emphasis is given to the role of the state in providing health care as well as the relationship between the state and the health industry. Students are expected to be familiar with the methodology of sociological research.
