Course Description

Revolutions have played a central role in the making of the modern world. From the revolutions in France, America, and Haiti in the late 18th century to those in North Africa and the Middle East in 2011, revolutions have been central to debates about war and peace, justice and order, intervention and sovereignty, and more. This course explores both the theory and practice of revolutions, teasing out their effects and examining the prospects for revolutionary change in the contemporary world. Students learn how to make informed judgments about how revolutions have impacted on core features of the international system.
