Course Description
The course examines the emerging issues and patterns in Global Governance as a corollary to the processes of globalization in its multi-faceted dimensions while foregrounding perspectives from the Global South. Focused on examining critical issues before Global Governance, the course discusses the main conceptual issues, contextual variables, and approaches for the study of Global Governance before a critical examination of the process of globalization. Given that the idea of Global Governance is often seen to be economically driven but embedded in extant global institutions, these issues are taken up for close scrutiny, apart from holding up a mirror of democracy, accountability, and transparency to such institutions. The impact of the joint processes of globalization and global governance on the State are examined along with the global civil society as both a harbinger as well as resistance to globalization and global governance.
