Course Description

The course focuses on the evolution of Russia’s federal system after the collapse of the Soviet Union and the nature of center-regional relations in present-day Russia, in the comparative context of post-Soviet Eurasia. The course attends to key institutions, trends, and reforms underpinning the process of regionalization in Russia during the 1990s and the subsequent recentralization during the 2000s. The prism of center-regional relations and federalism provides an additional perspective on the political economy of post-Soviet Russia, including issues such as the nature and extent of social, political, and economic reforms; the importance of structural preconditions and legacies inherited from the Soviet economy; resource-dependence and the politics of energy; and relations between the state and businesses in Russia.
